News in brief

IAPM Elections

The IAPM calls for nominations for the post of various office-bearers of the association. This year marks the completion of the tenure of all the current elected office-bearers. A change of guard will thus mark this year's annual conference, APCON 2007 at Chandigarh in November 2007. The new team will thus hold office for varying periods depending on the post from 2008 onwards. It is requested that all members take serious note of this important event and participate by filing nominations and casting their invaluable votes. The details are available on page 3.

APCON 2007

All members may have received the brochure regarding APCON 2007 from the Organizing Committee at Chandigarh. We expect wholehearted participation by all members especially our younger colleagues and trainees. Once again it is reiterated that membership of IAPM is an absolute necessity in order to present papers in the conference. It is hoped that the office-bearers shall not be requested to accommodate non-members who are desirous of presenting papers and posters in the appropriate sessions. Membership Forms are available with the Honorary Treasurer and other office-bearers and can be downloaded from the website.

From the Honorary Secretary

Dear friends

The time for the next Annual Conference (APCON 2007) is a few months away. This is the time for showcasing our research, for learning and educating ourselves, for meeting old friends, renewing ties and visiting Chandigarh, the City Beautiful. The Organizing Committee has worked hard to ensure a feast of academic events. This is to be expected since this year's hosts, the Department of Histopathology, Postgraduate Institute of Medical Education and Research has traditionally been one of the most outstanding centers of learning and training in Pathology in this country. However we would like to reiterate the request that all those who are desirous of presenting papers and posters should be members of the parent body.

This year also marks the end of the term of the entire IAPM team of office-bearers. A new team will take over after the elections this year. There is no dearth of talented and committed members who can carry the association to greater heights. We hope all members will in unison nominate and elect such talent.

Finally I would like to remind you that we hope to convene a special session of the General Body this year to sort out some issues related to our constitution, rules and bye-laws. This is possible due to the efforts of some of our senior members who have as always guided us with their experience and wisdom. Please do make it a point to attend the meeting so that we can have your views. This will only help improving our association.

We look forward to your continued participation in various activities of the association.

With kind regards

Yours sincerely

S. Datta Gupta

Nothing endures but change

Heraclitus,

Greek philosopher (540BC-480BC)

The new leaf

Change evokes different feelings to different people under different circumstances. Change is shunned, especially if it is for the worse and in some cases even if it is for the better! Change is likewise welcome. Change can bring joy or sorrow, pleasant surprise or undue pain, calm or even anger. In recent times changes in global environment has renewed our respect for nature. To match this is the equally interesting economic change in the world. The cynosure of all calculations and predictions are centered on two Asian countries: China and India. Actually this economic change is in a way a return to a situation over a century ago: in 1820, China and India accounted for around 49% of the world-wide GDP (Gross Domestic Product). In 1973 this fell to 8%. According to two renowned sources [International Monetary Fund, IMF and Goldman-Sachs], if the top or best base for GDP (market exchange rates) is 100, then for 2005, USA is ranked at the top (100) and China is fourth (20). India does not figure in the top ten of this list. However for the Purchasing Power Parity (PPP) in 2005, while USA tops the list (100), China is second (75) and India is fourth (30), just behind Japan. It is projected that by 2025, both India and China will reach the distinction of 1820 and in 2040 China (100) will forge ahead of USA (95) with India in the third position (45). Thus India is expected to move into an economically advantageous position. Longevity, literacy and GDP per capita are the main indicators of human development. The noted economist and Nobel Laureate Prof Amartya Sen has remarked that "Growth in national income by itself is not enough, if the benefits do not manifest themselves in the form of more food, better access to health and education". Therefore with economic development, improvement in healthcare cannot lag behind.

There is no doubt that infrastructure development including sanitation, safe drinking water, vaccination, improvement in primary health care among other factors are essential to ensure the best possible health of the citizens of this country. However while there will be a strong impetus to improve various specialties, the status of laboratory sciences such as Pathology and Microbiology as always is likely to be lost in the background. This fear is real. It is also unfortunate, since meaningful practice revolves around evidence-based diagnosis and treatment. It must be appreciated that human health has improved more over the past half-a-century than the previous two millennia largely due to prevention, early diagnosis and effective treatment for most diseases. While the contribution of investigation technologies (IT sector!) in this regard is well-known it is invariably associated with high cost. The corporate sector has fortunately and effectively boarded the band-wagon with state of art laboratories that compliment and match clinical services; thus also promoting medical tourism in this country. Up to two decades ago medical colleges were the centers where the general public would throng in case any specialized or expert diagnosis was necessary. Gradually the situation has changed. This is a matter of grave concern. Unless medical colleges get the necessary assistance that includes finances, training will suffer immensely. Where will the staff that can keep abreast of technologies come from, let alone the fate of the poor public who may not enjoy the benefit of improved medical care? Further, will our next generation of teachers in medical colleges not be conversant with the developments that take place everyday? Can underdeveloped Pathology and Microbiology survive in an otherwise developing country? It is time we contemplate on how to help our academic nurseries to turn over a new leaf.

Obituary

PROF. BIKRAM DAS

Prof. Bikram Das was born in 13th February, 1921 in a family of freedom fighters. His childhood and adolescence was thus nurtured in the cradle of struggle for independence. A freedom fighter to the core he did not allow his academic career come in the way of his patriotism. He was imprisoned several times for participating in the freedom movement. He graduated from Orissa Medical College in 1950. In 1954 he went to the United States of America to work under renowned Professors. He could have continued in USA but he refused to settle abroad and decided to return and serve his country. He had the rare and unique distinction of being the Founder Professor of two departments: the Department of Pathology and Microbiology, MKCG medical College, Berhampore and the Department of Microbiology, SCB Medical College, Cuttack. He was an excellent teacher and academician. He was an examiner in 19 universities in India. He also was an advisor for the Union Public Service Commission for a decade. Not only was he a Life Member of the Indian Association of Pathologists and Microbiologists (IAPM), he was also a Founder Fellow of the Indian College of Pathologists (ICP). A multifaceted personality, he had a passion for literature. He has over fifty publications that not only includes scientific literature but also novels, travelogues, fictions, essays, poetry and biography.

Prof. Bikram Das left for his heavenly abode on 24 June 2007. Not only have we lost an eminent Professor of Microbiology, but also a respected teacher, a true patriot, a man of plural pursuits and a genius whose imprints strived to enhance human values, knowledge and wisdom. May his soul rest in peace.
